Motorists—Take It Easy

The highways of North America are dotted with thousands of motor cars as people travel from city to town and town to city, and as they proceed on business journeys. Each and every one of these cars is a high-powered vehicle, capable of doing almost incalculable damage unless handled with judgment and discretion. Whether you and your friends enjoy the motor trip you may be making depends not on the speed you travel, but whether you arrive safely at your destination.

In the United States last year there were almost one million motor accidents, with 36,000 deaths. The accident and death rate in Canada is almost as high. Ontario last year recording 512 deaths and 8,900 accidents which were not fatal, but many of which meant people scared and maimed and intense suffering for hundreds.

In the driving of a car, a man reveals himself. It is the thoughtless, selfish, reckless driver that is largely responsible for the toll on the highways. What is gained if a man arrives at his destination a few seconds ahead of schedule? Why do so many men, when seated behind the wheel of a car, not like hours and leave behind them their vestige of courtesy and consideration for others?

The motor is a wonderful invention, but in the hands of a man without judgment or balance, is a terrible instrument of destruction, leaving death and maimed lives in its wake.

In the August issue of that popular little magazine, "Reader's Digest," there appeared an article entitled "—And Sudden Death!" which has attracted continent-wide notice and hundreds of thousands of reprints of which are being distributed throughout the United States. The only regret is that a copy cannot be placed in the hands of every person who drives an automobile. It is a gruesome record of what automobile accidents really are, a realistic portrayal of scenes witnessed every day on the highways of this supposedly civilized continent.

The automobile, says the writer of this article, is treacherous, just as a cat is. It is tragically difficult to realize that it can become the deadliest missile. As enthusiasts tell you, it makes 65 an hour feel like nothing at all. But 65 an hour is 100 feet a second, a speed which puts a viciously unjustified responsibility on brakes and human reflexes, and can instantly turn this docile hobby into a mad bull-charger.

Collision, turnover or skidding, each type of accident produces either a shattering dead stop or a crashing change of direction — and, since the occupant — meaning you — continues in the old direction at the original speed, every surface and angle of the car's interior immediately becomes a battering, tearing projectile, aimed squarely at you — inescapable. There is no bracing yourself against these impetuous laws of momentum.

It is like going over Niagara Falls in a steel barrel full of railroad spikes. The best thing that can happen to you — and one of the rarest things — is to be thrown out of the doors spring open, so you have only the ground to reckon with. True, you strike with as much force as if you had been thrown from the Twentieth Century at top speed. But at least you are spared the lethal array of gleaming metal knobs and edges and glass inside the car.

Anything can happen in that split second of a crash, even those lucky escapes you hear about. People have dived through windshields and come out with only superficial scratches. They have run cars together head on, reducing both to twisted junk, and been found unhurt and arguing bitterly two minutes afterward. But death was there just the same — he is only exercising his privilege of being erratic.

And every time you pass on a blind curve, every time you hit it up on a slippery road, every time you step on it harder than your reflexes will safely take, every time you drive with your reactions slowed down by a drink or two, every time you follow the man ahead too closely, you're gambling a few seconds against injury and sudden death.

There is an old legal point that "time is of the essence of the contract." This is not true on the highway; the reverse is true. Your duty, as a driver is to bring safety home not only yourself, but your family and friends who may be travelling with you. Equally, it is your duty to not drive your car out as to in no way endanger others but to allow them to likewise reach their homes in safety.

Rebuilt By New Method

Worn Machine Parts Made As Good As New

Fired at the speed of a rifle bullet, particles of hot metal rebuild worn machine parts by a new method. Rebuilt heads are cut into the surface to be repaired and then the metal is sprayed on the grooves and ridges in such a way as to "freeze" and become part of the metal under treatment. The spraying is done with an electrically operated gun that "shoots" the metal particles through a tiny hole in the nozzle at 2,700 feet per second. The rebuilt parts are smoothed and polished with abrasives, giving long wear. Platen rule, cylinder walls, shafts, bearings and turbines are among the parts treated successfully. — Popular Mechanics.

Jubilee Week Was Busy

King's Secretaries Replied To Over Ten Thousand Messages

Statistics just available give some indication of the work performed by His Majesty's secretaries during Jubilee week. During the period May 3 to 9 the King received 10,264 telegrams from every conceivable part of the world. Every sender of a telegram within the British Isles, no matter what his rank or station in life, had a reply sent him by His Majesty or by one of the private secretaries. Overseas messages were similarly answered, the more important by cable, but many by a personal letter from the King's secretaries or His Majesty's representative in the Dominions or Colonies.

Worked Under Difficulties

French Engineers Had Hard Job Building Hotels In Algeria

As the French penetrate further and further south into the Sahara, pacifying the roving Arab tribes as they go, hotels are being erected for the accommodation of Government officials, visiting Army officers, business men and the occasional venturesome tourist. The hotels had to be taken south, through the desert, in parcels. Each parcel weighed about 200 lbs. and was one camel-load. Caravan after caravan, traveling forty-five days through sands, brought to Timimoun, in the far south of Algeria, the many tons of windows, doors, glass, china, linen, cutlery, furniture, electrical installation and other equipment needed for the local hotel. Neither foremen nor European laborers would agree to go there, so the place was built by French army engineers, who themselves had to trace in the sand the first outline of the building because the superstitious wild Arabs of the region feared The Evil Eye, and would not have anything to do with blue-prints. They did consent to make mud-brick walls, however, which the French used to drag up to the site the date-palm trunks forming the roof beams and "girders." The rest had to come in parcels. Even the ships of the desert bringing the parcels were temperamental. They would not travel on such good roads as were to be found along their line of route, but had to be steered over soft sandy courses. Camels suffer from bad spells of foot soreness unless allowed soft tracks.

Drama Festival Finals

Dates Are Set For 1936 Contests In Western Canada

Regulations covering the 1936 Dominion drama festival provide for contests in 11 regions into which Canada is divided for competition, with a final week in Ottawa beginning Monday, April 20.

Issued by J. A. Aylen, honorary secretary-general of the festival, the regulations set the following dates for English play regional festivals in western Canada: British Columbia (Vancouver), Jan. 27 to Feb. 1; Alberta (Calgary), Feb. 6, 7, 8; Saskatchewan (Saskatoon), Feb. 13, 14, 15; Manitoba (Winnipeg), Feb. 20, 21, 22.

Regional festivals for French plays will be held in Quebec City, Montreal and Ottawa on dates to be arranged and announced later.

No play performed in the finals at Ottawa in 1934 or 1935 will be eligible for presentation in 1936, the regulations set forth. As in the past the festival will be restricted to one-act plays or single self-contained scenes from longer plays which occupy not less than 20 and not more than 45 minutes.

Director of the festival again will be in the hands of Col. H. C. Osborne, honorary director, and an executive committee. In each region a regional committee will have charge.

Times Have Changed

Back in the good old days a boy could go to a picnic and have a dandy time of time on days he would ride the merry-go-round a couple of times, drink a glass of red lemonade and spend the other time for a ticket to a minstrel show. But how things have changed. A boy of the same age in these fast-stepping times will spend at least $2 or $3, and blamed if he believes he has as good a time as his boy who took a quarter with him for his day's expenditures at a picnic.

Predicts Horseless London

Ministry of Transport Working Toward Mechanizing System

Within five years, it is predicted, the London dray horse will be no rare in London as to be regarded as a curiosity, the streets of 1940 being practically entirely free of horses. The Ministry of Transport is hastening this condition by plans to substitute horse-drawn traffic by a completely mechanized system, and some of these plans will be carried into effect shortly.

The busiest streets in London will be closed to horse-drawn traffic in the near future by regulations soon to be issued by the department. Already there is a device operating in Oxford street between certain hours. Later an edict will be issued that horse-drawn vehicles will not be allowed in London at all after a period of from three to five years.

Under existing traffic legislation, the Minister of Transport, L. Horne-Bellah, has power to put an end to traffic by horse in London's streets. His department, however, has no intention of driving horses from the streets until their owners have had fair warning.

Eastern Excursions

Bargain Fare Offered By C.P.R. and C.N.R. For Early Autumn Trip

Popularity of early autumn bargain fares to eastern Canada last year has induced the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National railways to offer similar travel privileges in September of this year, according to an announcement by Messrs. H. Parker, western secretary, Canadian Pacific, and C. E. Winnipeg.

This fall weather route, attractive after the heat of summer, begins with a ticket sale from September 21 to October 4 and bears a full return limit of 45 days in addition to the date of sale. Stop-over privileges go with the tickets within a limit at the stations of Port Arthur, Armstrong and east.

Tickets will be honored in coaches, tourist or standard sleepers on payment of fare according to the accommodation desired. They will be on sale from all stations from Port Arthur, Armstrong and west, including Pacific Coast points to all stations including Seattle, Salt Lake, Butte, Spokane, Cochrane and east.

This Robin Was Clever

Called Man To Help Rescue Mate From Snake

The story of a robin which called a man to rescue its mate from the jaws of a snake was told Friday. George Swan, attracted by a bird screaming and flapping against the back door of his home, went in to investigate. The robin flew away as he approached, appearing to call him on, and Swan followed.

It led him to the end of the garden circling close to the fence, calling loudly. There in the grass there lay a snake with another robin in its mouth. He killed the three-foot reptile with a stick and the two birds flew away together.

MISS ALADDIN

SYNOPSIS

Nancy Nelson is a sub-eb, a gay, irresponsible girl of nineteen, with no care beyond the choice of her costume for her coming-out party. Suddenly, in the market crash, her indulgent father, who had been her family's sole support, dies, leaving her a simple method of living. At this juncture a letter is received from an eccentric relative in Colorado, who offers the girl a home on what seems to be impossible conditions.

After much consideration Cousin Columbus's offer is accepted, and Nancy and Jack arrive at Pine Ridge. Nancy set out one afternoon to climb to the top of a hill so as to obtain a view of the surrounding landscape and miss the path through the bushes. As she was about to start, she saw along the road, driven by Matthew Adams, and she saw a man which way to go. They ascended the hill, round and then go on to Cousin Columbus's house. "Mark Adams told Nancy that his brother Luke had broken his leg, and that Jack Nelson has been hired to help out while Luke's leg gets better," Jack said. Nancy made it that she is homesick, and having no books to read, the idea of starting a public library at Pine Ridge seems a good one. These anxious months have brought him some grey hairs; but he's happy and interested now, and wondering if you're not almost ready to go home.

Nancy and Matthew Adam go to the bank. The bank is a small, old-fashioned building. On their return to Pine Ridge, Nancy is amazed to find that the residence all the way to, and asks Matthew if he knows why. He said: "Let's go in and see. Then Nancy learns that she is having her debut; but to a different setting than had been planned for her in Boston."

Nancy's parents are very glad to have her liberal support to her request for books, and a stealer box arrived in due course. Father Adam painted a sign for the library, and the Adams boys worked on the shelves for the books and decorations to make the room look presentable.

Now Go On With The Story

To the natives of Pine Ridge the Aladdin Library seemed wonderful enough as it was. "And how every one of those blessed Adams had worked!" thought Nancy with gratitude. Father Adam's next lettering adorned more than three hundred books which Juanita and Mary Taylor had helped her cover with brown paper. They had had fun over it, too. Some of the work was done on winter evenings when Jack and the Adams boys had joined them, as well as the good-looking forest ranger who appeared at church one Sunday, and had contrived to appear at the Nelson mansion at frequent intervals ever since.

Mother Adam made and donated cretonne hangings for the windows. Matthew and Mark had built the shelves; low shelves which grided the whole room, made from lumber they "just found lying around the place," as they called it. Even Jack, busy at school, appeared one week-end with a dozen books; and Luke painted four chairs found in a barn. The transformation of the cheerful Chinese red, these proved such a success that he insisted on painting Nancy's "desk" as well, and a table for magazines found in Aurora's cellar; while his mother sacrificed a wicker porch chair, cushioned to match the hangings at the window.

"This place would be almost cozy if it weren't for the bare walls," said Mary Taylor. "But don't you mention the lack of pictures before Juanita." Knowing what impossible contribution she might bring in, Nancy smiled, and answered: "I'll forgo in Cousin Columbus's attic. I've got an old engraving of Lincoln up there the other day."

There was also one of George Washington; and Mary appeared that afternoon with what she called her mother called "a yard of art's," photographs of the New England people framed in oak.

Eve Adams laughed when she saw this offering. "It brings back Nancy. Stored in our attic a yard of roses; and we had a yard of kittens in the nursery. That idea used to be all the rage."

"(Gee, Mum!) I remember those kittens!" This Mark pausing as he adjusted a crooked window shade. "They had blue ribbons round their necks and extraordinarily long whiskers! But these are good photographs. Nancy. They'll add a literary touch to our decorations."

No wonder Nancy felt a thrill of pride at the result of her planning! Out of what a few short weeks before had been a bare and useless room, had blossomed this cheery little place; and already the people of the village were asking if it couldn't be opened every night. Ten days ago they had had their "house warming," with hot chocolate and doughnuts for refreshments—a party which even Victor Bucks had roused himself sufficiently to attend!

This had been on a Saturday, and the minister who conducted services in the Pine Ridge church twice every month, arrived in time to make a speech. Nancy hadn't counted on that; but it was a good speech and she liked the minister, so she had referred to her as "our dear young benefactor." Indeed, at this point in his address, Jack had been stricken with an attack of choking, and at least four Adams had winked in her direction; while the sophisticated Nancy Nelson had felt her ears grow scarlet with confusion.

Nancy smiled at the memory. She was feeling particularly happy this afternoon for good news had arrived from home. Dad was making a new start, with a vegetable plot, and had been offered an unexpectedly good price for the city house.

"In some ways it's a wrench to give it up," wrote her mother. "But we can't lose this chance; and in any case we shall stay in Edgemore for several years. Phil loves his school; and I am loving the life of a country town again. It's such a joy to see your father his cheerful self once more. These anxious months have brought him some grey hairs; but he's happy and interested now, and wondering if you're not almost ready to go home."

Home! The girl drew a long, long breath. It would be wonderful to see Dad and Mother and, Phil and the aunts, and all the old crowd; and, of course, but Cousin Columbus was going to miss her frightfully. And she couldn't leave until the library was running smoothly and she found somebody to fill her place.

Nancy leaned forward, lifting a child's hand with her own, and on her desk for voluntary contributions, and smiled as a reassuring rattle met her ears. The first donation had come from a small girl who said, as she dropped in a shining penny: "It's to help your library, Miss Aladdin."

Nothing had ever pleased Nancy so much as this innocent mistake in her identity. Matthew Adam, who turned it into a throw-away comment of appreciative understanding; while his father was so delighted with the application that he'd addressed her as Miss Aladdin ever since.

The bank had flourished. Yesterday Juanita had contributed the price of the concert music, and was really enjoying some decent novels. Two boys from a nearby ranch whom Nancy supposed little better than farm boys, were feigning good travel books; and the wife of a health-seeker, two miles back in the village, told Nancy when tears in her eyes that it seemed "like heaven" to have something to read again.

"And to think," said Cousin Columbus when the girl recounted this pathetic incident, "that I've been too thoughtless to look up those people and see their needs. But so many sick folks come that we take them too much for granted. I'm ashamed of myself. No wonder they call you Miss Aladdin!"

Steps sounded without, and Nancy glanced up. It was not yet ten o'clock, but someone was coming. Then the door swung back to admit her brother and Matthew Adam. Luke was about again, and Jack was job hunting.

"Any luck?" asked Nancy, as the boys drew up two gay red chairs. "Matthew nodded."

"Your nodder seemed to profit by the misfortunes of others. Luke broke a shoe, and so he got a new one. And now my Uncle Tom (Mother's brother, who has a ranch out on the plains) is in a bad way. He's got two of his men, and has sent an S.O.S. for one of us fellows to help them out. Mark's drawn the unlucky number, and Jack's got to go back to the ranch again to take his place."

"Well!" said Nancy. "I'm sorry to hear that. You can't be too careful for Jack; and sometimes there are complications after all!"

"A lot of sympathy you have for Uncle Tom!" grinned Matthew. Nancy laughed.

"It was merely wondering how long the job would last. Time goes so rapidly; and some day we've got to turn our faces to the East, you know?"

Jack said nothing; and suddenly Matt's color rose. "Why—why isn't leaving us this spring?" "I know," said Jack. "I mean—Cousin Columbus said you'd stay a year!" "I know; but such a thought never entered our heads. Matt. And now Dad's made me up. I'm pretty sure they'll want us to come home. Not that I don't dread leaving Cousin Columbine. I'm awfully afraid she's going to miss us."

Jack, still alert, arose and went over to a window. Matthew sat down, and the space "Beneath the rest of us will miss you too," Nancy said surprisingly. "There's Mother and me."

Nancy laughed outright, and asked, eyes lighted with merriment: "Say up! a pretty speech like that, Matt?"

"Spill it!" Jack came back, grinning, and dumped into the cushioned chair. "The mean, old man. There was no time to mention Mother! Honest, Nancy, have we got to go?"

"You don't want to?" questioned his sister.

"Do you?" he countered. "The girl was silent, looking down at the toe of Matthew's boot. "I don't know, exactly," she said at last. "I'm not sure if I want to go, or if I don't; course, though I'd rather stay here during the summer. But I wonder if Cousin Columbus won't miss us more if we leave her in the dark. Spring's a cheerful time of year, you know; and she's getting old."

"I won't make a turn to stand at the window, from which safe retreat he said over his shoulder: 'You're going to leave a big hole in Pine Ridge's folk.'"

"Well," observed Jack, "we haven't gone yet, father; and don't tell us if we leave her in the dark. I don't think I shall have loved at all!"

He laughed, but Matt, still gazing at Place's Park, responded soberly: "Whoever wrote that bunk was feeble-minded," and added, moving toward the door, eyes turned disdainingly to the plain of Miss Aladdin: "Come on, Jack, we must get going. Mark'll drop in to-morrow to say good-bye, Nancy. Luke's driving to the Springs where somebody from Prairie Ranch will pick him up. He says he feels as if he were sentenced to Siberia, though it's the first time he hasn't jumped at the chance of going to Uncle Tom's! I—I wonder what he's up to."

Nancy smiled at this subtle comment, and went to the door to watch the boys depart. There was a glimpse of the plains from her little porch, and as they lingered a moment the girl asked, her eyes on that uninteresting vista: "Does your uncle live right on the prairie, Matt?"

The young man nodded. "Sixty miles out, in a big old ranch house surrounded by cottonwoods—a bully place. Those plains are wonderful, Nancy, and sometimes treacherous, too. We'll take you out after the weather settles. No knowing what thrilling adventures we may have!"

Light words, — Matt little thought that only a few weeks later they would come back to him during long, tragic hours which none of them was ever to forget.

Place Of Historic Interest

Fort Churchill Eloquent With Stories of Courage and Disaster

The other day Fort Churchill, Canada's northern port on the Hudson Bay and the prairie's back door to the salt seas, was celebrating the opening of the shipping season. As a special issue the development of Churchill has been almost talked out. It was ridiculed and bitterly attacked when the first trails were being laid and the grain terminals were under construction. But as a place of historic interest it has great significance and fascination.

For more than three hundred years ships have sailed into the Hudson Bay from the ports of Great Britain and Europe. Into it came the early explorers in their search for the northwest passage to the Orient and Cathay. By this route the first live stock and the first piano ever brought to the opening west were freighted by sturdy sailing vessels.

And at Churchill English and French held forts now crumbled into ruins. The Danish explorer, Munk, in the early part of the seventeenth century, survived a bitter winter in which most of his companions perished. Many decades later, in 1812, the gallant Selkirk settlers struggled with nature in the face of the port; they were almost hanged through a steady cold of before they could start on the trek to their new homes in the north. Churchill is eloquent with stories of courage, treachery and disaster.

The sub-Arctic holds its lure to the adventurer. The annual opening of this new Canadian port may still remind us of the determination of the pioneer explorers and settlers to overcome the hostile barriers of nature in a new land.—Hamilton Spectator.

Thereupon the conductor broke in to fluent German, and the matter was adjusted. The delighted passenger moved to a seat beside the door, and a long conversation, glowing with international amity, followed.

They parted with effusive Adieu, wiesehrchen.—London Daily Sketch.

Egyptian Shortland

Papers Recently Discovered Show System Many Centuries Old

Three pieces of ancient Egyptian "paper" were discovered not long ago. On them were marks which proved very interesting, for they were really a system of shorthand many centuries old. Actually these treasures dated from the third century A.D. and there could be no doubt about them, for there was a perfectly good longhand "translation" given with the shorthand signs. It was this last fact which made the documents most interesting, for it gave the key to other manuscripts which until then had been mysteries that nobody was able to explain.

Demand For Maps

Search For New Mineral Deposits Calls For Detailed Information

A marked increase in the demand for maps, among prospectors, sportsmen, foresters, engineers, and other classes, is reported by the Topographical and Air Survey Bureau of the Department of the Interior. During the last fiscal year 80,000 copies were distributed by the bureau, in comparison with approximately 70,000 during the preceding year.

The intensive search for new mineral deposits during the year was an important factor in the increase, while the desire to obtain maps to secure detailed maps of an area, when planning fishing, hunting or canoe trips, had a marked tendency to further increase the demand. The fact that a great many of the maps of the bureau are made from photographs taken by air, thus ensuring a completeness of detail that does not prevail in the case of the older maps, also contributed to the increase.

A total of seventy-two maps of different districts throughout Canada are in the process of preparation by the bureau and many of the areas being covered give promise of early mineral or other development.

Turkish Lay Men

Compels Them To Wear Hats With Brims

If being allowed to wear what you like is a symbol of freedom in general, Turkish women are distinctly freer than Turkish men. The men to wear hats by law, by the Turkish hats with brims. The brim is to prevent him from touching the ground with his forehead, as religious custom prescribes, when he is saying prayers. The women may wear what they choose.

Owen, D.D., D.C.L. Mr. S. J. Garrett is kindly loaning a radio for this broadcast. Everybody welcome.

This is grain week in Carbon and the elevators are advertising their service. Cast an eye on their messages.

We notice several new trucks in the district. It's either the large crop or the prospects of the Social Credit dividends that have stimulated sales.

Does it pay to advertise? On Saturday we walked into the post office to get mail and noticed a man and his wife reading a circular, printed for C.H. Nash by The Chronicle. They were going over the items one by one, checking off purchases they evidently wished to make. We believe that Mr. Nash did business, for later in the day we noticed the lady mentioned entering his store.

"Goodness! How fat Betty is getting."

"That's because she dally doesn't."

"I hope you are not afraid of mice."

"Apologized the paying-teller as he cashed the stenographer's check with soiled currency."

"Don't worry," said the port young thing. "A stenographer couldn't live on my salary."
